ARMY AND NAVY Y. M. C. A. WORK

Association Plans to Establish Fully Equip Branches Where There Are Regiments or Brigades.

New York, July 20.—The Army and Navy Department of the Young Men's Christian association, dealing with the first general mobilization of the National Guard of the United States since the association was officially recognized by general orders of the war department, announces some interesting features of its plan for work among the troops on the Mexican border. The association plans to establish at least twenty-five fully equipped branches at camps where there are brigades or single regiments of troops, and through these to demonstrate the efficiency of the association's work in soldier life.

Regardless of the eventualities, the work will be carried on with vigor, the association leaders say, for although avoidance of war modifies the methods of the work, the concentration of relatively permanent units of troops makes Y. M. C. A. influence an even more necessary factor than in the event of war itself. It is explained that emphasis will first be laid upon work among the state troops, because they have just been picked from civil life and need the kind of help the association can give, more than the regulars need such leadership.

Can Cross Line.

In case of war troops would be sent across the line and shift positions so continuously that the Y. M. C. A. work would have to be conducted through small branches in the field. Without war, but with thousands of troops stationed along the border for an indefinite period, most of them in large garrisons or camps, and subject to emergency or patrol duty, conditions will exist calling for the utmost efforts on the part of the army Y. M. C. A. branches.

Officers of the war department, from the secretary of war and the members of the general staff down, recognize the danger of breakdown in the normal and social ideals of the men in their new environment and they are not only welcoming the association work but urging that it be established wherever possible and offering co-operation to the fullest extent under military rules and regulations. Every step that has been taken has been after consultation with the higher officers of the war department and the army and all plans for work at the camps are put into execution after consultation with the commanders in the field, who are offering every possible assistance and co-operation.

Secretary Interviews Officials.

George A. Reeder, secretary of the army and navy department of the Young Men's Christian Association, who is in charge of the work on the Mexican border, has had interviews with Secretary Baker, General Scott, the chief of staff, and other officers in Washington. All expressed themselves as extremely anxious that the association work should promptly be gotten under way. These officials dwell on the discomforts and hardships of the regular troops on the border and said the militia, unused to the climatic and service conditions, would find the life much harder than the regular troops.

The association field work, like that of the army, has its organization and commanders. At the head of the Mexican border work is Mr. Reeder, who has been designated as executive secretary. Directly supervising the field work are field secretaries.

If the reorganization of the border forces of the army into three departments is carried out, there will be three field secretaries, with offices near the general commanding each department. Each field secretary will have general oversight of the activities of the camp secretaries and they in turn will direct their assistants at each camp.

Troops Are Interested.

Of the twenty-five association branches or units to be established, several already have their outfits in operation and report encouraging interest and support from the troops. Other branches are being organized as rapidly as material, equipment and men can be assembled. At nearly all of the permanent stations on the border, especially where there are no chaplains, the association has had its work in operation for some time past.

The outfit for an association branch at a brigade camp comprises a frame building with full equipment, in charge of a secretary and four assistants. Should more than one brigade be in the same camp, additional brigade branches are required. The regimental camps, which are likely to be permanent, will have a smaller building, in charge of a secretary and one or more assistants. After the work is established among the brigade and regimental units of troops, plans are to be developed for battalion branches and for work in smaller troop units as far as condition will permit.

More than one hundred secretaries will be employed in the work already planned and under way. The army and navy department is sending all secretaries with army experience to the border as fast as they can be released from other work. Under the direction of the department there are a number of men of the finest type who conducted association work among the troops in the war with Spain. Most of these are being entrusted with the work of organization and supervision in the field.

Workers Ahead of Troops.

In practically all of the state mobilization camps the state Young Men's Christian associations promptly establish work, frequently being on the ground before any of the troops arrive. Many of the secretaries accompanied the troops to the border and in many cases the state committees are paying the salaries of these men, the army and navy department assuming the other expenses of the work. Secretaries are being drawn also from city associations, especially throughout the South. Some associations in cities from which troops have been sent to the border have offered the services of assistant secretaries and planning to continue their salaries while under the direction of the army and navy department in the border work.

It is the business of the secretaries in charge to make the association branch a cheer-up spot in the monotony of camp life on the border, in the extreme heat of a Texas summer with the rigors of military service.

It is believed that nearly all entertainments, lectures, gospel services and large assemblages of any kind can be held out of doors, as the Texas border is an outdoor country. The secretaries in charge will be provided with living tents by the government, or in some cases, if preferable, a corner of the building can be fitted up for their accommodation.

Good Motion Pictures.

The standard equipment includes a first class talking machine with one hundred up-to-date records and a good picture machine with films. There is usually an information bureau and a safe deposit department for the safe-keeping of money, valuables and anything the men want to leave in the care of the association. Always included in the equipment is a folding organ for religious services and to accompany the singing of popular songs.

The association branches usually provide the social leadership of the camp. There are lectures and concerts, both professional and amateur, and addresses by prominent men. When any man comes to the camp to lecture to the officers or men on any technical subject, the association building is offered as the center at which the men may gather. At the larger branches there will be a motion picture show practically every night. Films will be sent on a circuit from one camp to another. Some of the entertainments will be of a competitive amateur character, in which talent from various companies will compete against each other.

Branch Costs $2,000.

The average cost of an army branch building, including full equipment, is about $2,000. At least one man who has a son in the militia has given $2,000 for the equipment of a branch unit and it is proposed to name the branch after the donor. A gift of $5,000 provides the building and running expenses of a branch for six months.

Most of the secretaries are trained as leaders in recreative sports and competitive games. Basketball and volleyball will be organized. If conditions are favorable, there will be tennis and quail tournaments. Where the routine of the camp will permit, baseball nines will be formed and a league started, using the teams out of various companies or regiments, and starting a series of games.

All Denominations Welcome.

The religious feature of the work will be provided for by a program of gospel meetings and Bible classes. Should a prominent religious worker be near the border, efforts will be made to take him from camp to camp, in order that he may address the men. Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, of Brooklyn, chaplain of the Twenty-third New York Infantry, has already agreed to address the men in the camps as far as he is able to do so. Men were also in Bible classes at the state mobilization camps and this is expected to be a most interesting and steady feature of the religious work at the border branches. The association building will be available for religious services conducted by the chaplains or by visiting ministers of any denomination. Every secretary also is expected to conduct a steady, constructive program of personal work. It is impressed upon them that they are to be a big brother to every man in the whole camp, and to help them by counsel and advice, especially those who are depressed or affected by the climate or the monotony of camp life.

Outpost duty, guarding the railroad lines, is exceedingly lively. Every bridge, culvert, hill and other point where the use of explosives might cut the railroad line used by the troops is guarded by detachments of different strength, averaging perhaps fifty men. The hardships of this life in the open, without the accommodations even of a well-ordered camp, are very great. One of the secretaries of the Young Men's Christian association, on a recent trip of inspection, asked a soldier who was reading an almanac at one of these outposts if that was all the reading matter he had in his camp. The reply was: "Yes, and every man here got it before I did
